Kiến thức trọng tâm / Key language notes

Reading - skimming vs scanning

VI SKIM: đọc tiêu đề, câu đầu/ cuối để tìm ý chính. SCAN: tìm ngày, số, tên riêng, từ khóa và từ đồng nghĩa.

EN Skim for the main idea; scan for a precise fact. Locate evidence, then read around it.

Reading - paraphrase

VI Ví dụ: “costly to look after” ~ “maintenance can be expensive”. Không chỉ tìm từ giống hệt.

EN Many correct answers are signalled by meaning rather than identical wording.

Writing - map introduction

VI The two maps show/compare... + nơi chốn + hai mốc thời gian. Không thêm ý kiến cá nhân.

EN Introduce subject and years; do not explain causes not shown in the maps.

Writing - map overview

VI Overall, ... was redeveloped ... while ... remained unchanged. Nêu 1–2 thay đổi lớn.

EN Overview identifies main changes and unchanged features; it is not a list of every location.

Writing - past passive

VI S + was/were + V3: The old cinema was converted into an art gallery.

EN Use passive when the changed facility is more important than the builder.

Writing - position

VI next to/beside = cạnh; between A and B = giữa; north of = phía bắc; opposite = đối diện; in the corner = ở góc.

EN Relative location needs an accurate reference point and correct prepositions.

Listening - corrected numbers

VI He says 14 June, then corrects to 15 June: take the FINAL date. Hãy lưu ý but / actually / sorry / not.

EN Later corrections often replace earlier options; do not choose the first number heard.

Speaking - answer structure

VI Answer Detail Reason/Example. Trả lời đúng trọng tâm trước, sau đó thêm chi tiết.

EN Aim for 2–3 natural sentences for Part 1 without reciting memorised scripts.

Pronunciation -ed

VI /t/ sau âm vô thanh khác /t/: walked; /d/ sau âm hữu thanh khác /d/: played; /ɪd/ sau /t/, /d/: wanted, needed.

EN Classify the final SOUND of the base verb, not its final written letter.

PASSAGE A: Four Unusual Homes and Why They Work

Not every comfortable home looks like an ordinary flat or house. Around the world, some families choose surprising places to live because of the weather, the cost of land, or their personal interests. Four households explain how their unusual homes have changed their routines.

In northern Norway, Mila and her partner live in a small cabin with a roof covered in grass. The thick grass helps keep the rooms warm during long winters. They built the cabin in 2018 after leaving a crowded city. In summer, they grow vegetables beside it. The nearest supermarket is twenty kilometres away, so they shop only once a week. Mila says their home is peaceful, although travelling to work takes longer than before.

In the Netherlands, two friends, Leo and Sam, converted an old boat into a floating home in 2020. Their boat is tied to a quiet harbour, not far from the train station. The living room is narrow but bright because it has large windows. During storms, the boat moves slightly. At first, this movement made Sam nervous, but now he hardly notices it. They pay less for heating than they did in their previous apartment, although maintenance can be expensive.

Outside Tokyo, architect Hana designed a micro-house on a narrow piece of land. The building is just four metres wide but has three levels. Instead of many walls, Hana used movable shelves to separate the sleeping and working areas. She cycles to her office and rarely uses a car. She believes people can live comfortably in a smaller space if every room has more than one purpose.

In southern Spain, a family restored a stone farmhouse that had been empty for almost thirty years. They kept the original thick walls and added modern windows. The house stays cool in summer without much air conditioning. The family moved there in 2022 and now run weekend art workshops. They enjoy welcoming visitors, but they must spend time repairing the old roof every year.

These homes are very different, yet their owners share one view: a successful home should support the way people live rather than simply look impressive.

PASSAGE B: A New Life in the Village of Alderbrook

When my mother accepted a job in Alderbrook, I was worried about leaving the city. At seventeen, I thought the village would be too quiet and that I would lose contact with my friends. We moved in August, three weeks before my new school opened. Our rented house was small, but it had a garden and a view of the hills.

During the first month, I travelled to school by bus. The journey took forty minutes because the bus stopped in five villages. I often arrived tired. My father suggested that I join the local cycling club, so I went to a meeting on a Saturday morning. I met several students who lived near me. They showed me a shorter route to school, and soon I began cycling instead of taking the bus. It took only twenty-five minutes.

The village has fewer shops than the city, and there is no large cinema. However, its community centre offers free music classes every Wednesday evening. I joined a guitar class and later helped organise a concert to raise money for the centre. At the event, more than a hundred residents came to listen. That was the first time I felt I belonged to the community.

Last winter, heavy rain damaged a footbridge over the river. For six weeks, people had to take a longer path to the library and sports field. Several residents collected money, and a local builder repaired the bridge in March. This experience taught me that people in a small village often depend on one another.

My friends in the city still visit sometimes. When they come, we walk through the woods, explore the old railway station, and have lunch in the market square. They are surprised by how much there is to do. I do not think village life is perfect: buses are infrequent, and some services close early. Nevertheless, I now appreciate the peaceful surroundings and the strong sense of community. If my family moves again, I will miss Alderbrook more than I expected.
